What is Magna Charta?

Magna Charta (Latin for "Great Charter") or Magna Charta Libertatum (Latin for "Great Charter of the Liberties"), is an English charter signed in 1215. With his charter the authority of the king was limited for the first time granting certain rights and freedoms to the public. It is one of the important historical stepping stones in reaching today's constitutional order. It was originally signed by Papa III. Innocent, King Johnson and barons in order to make a decision about the authority of the king. It necessitated the king waiving away some of his power and acting according to law. It meant that the power of law was above the wish and requests of the king.

Magna Charta Universitatum is a document that was signed on the 18th of September 1201 at the 900th anniversary of the University of Bologna. It was signed by 388 rectors in Europe and beyond. It contains principles of academic freedom and institutional autonomy as a guideline for good governance and self-understanding of universities in the future. To this day, the document has been signed by 805 universities from 85 different countries.
