Eastern Mediterranean University (EMU) Rector Prof. Dr. Hasan Kılıç released a congratulatory message on the occasion of 1 May – Labor and Solidarity Day. The message released by Prof. Dr. Kılıç reads as follows:

1st of May is celebrated worldwide by the working class and laborers and is observed as the day of unity, solidarity and fight against injustice all around the world. In fact, being the anniversary day of the struggle initiated to improve the rights and working conditions of the working class, 1st of May is symbol of the fights put forward to adjust the working hours of the working-class people and to establish the implementation of 8-hour working day, during the 19th century. Without a doubt, labor is the most important value in the world. Every task undertaken with diligence, sweat, and rightful earnings is deemed valuable. To ensure that all workers worldwide possess equal rights and freedoms, the struggle should persist not just on one designated day of the year, but every day. The rights of workers must be advocated for and safeguarded not only on 1 May but on each day. The Great Leader Mustafa Kemal Atatürk also expressed his thoughts on the necessity for all workers to have equal rights and freedoms with the statement, “In our eyes, the rights, interests, and freedoms of farmers, shepherds, workers, merchants, artisans, doctors, and in short, all citizens are equal”.

As the sole state university of the country established by law, Eastern Mediterranean University attaches great value on all workers in every field, and efforts are made continually to improve their rights and working conditions. Our university's staff members working in academic, administrative, and worker positions are significant and esteemed members of our university. With these sentiments, I extend my sincerest wishes for a Happy Labor and Solidarity Day to all the workers who contribute to enhancing our university and country, and I hope for a bright future where the rights of workers are upheld worldwide.
